Carrie Gardner has a date to get darker. For the last few weeks, she has slipped into her bikini in search of the ultimate tan.

Carrie Gardner wanted her arms and legs to have a brown glow before she went on vacation.

She is going for airbrush tanning in the 400 block of Westheimer near Montrose.

It's a customized spray tan that allows customers to choose not only how dark they want to get, but also where they want to be tan.

Because Gardner is about to go on vacation, she wants her arms and legs to have a brown glow.

"It helps to define my muscles better and does make you look a little thinner, so that's what a lot of girls are looking for," Gardner says.

Scott Hendrickson is the owner of Eclipse Sunless Tanning. "Some people choose to do just their face or legs or upper body, depending on maybe they've got a special event and they're wearing a low cut dress or a short skirt or something like that. Or they just want to tan certain areas of their bodies that haven't seen the sun enough," he says.

Another thing to consider is that airbrush tanning takes away the need for summer sunbathing, removing those potentially harmful UV rays.

Carrie Gardner is a bronzing believer. "I've been doing this for four or five months and I'm addicted," she says.

This is tanning the way you like it.
